Other Objectives Addressed

- b. Identify and explain how graphic aids contribute to meaning
- c. Identify and explain how informational aids contribute to meaning

Instructional Task

Students will analyze text features to facilitate the understanding of mythology. Students will assume the roles of book editors and will compile collections of myths from cultures they are studying in Social Studies. The student editors will write introductions to their collections explaining how text features have been used to facilitate understanding the content of the myths. The mythology collections can be shared with Social Studies teachers for use in their classes (authentic product).

Development of Task

1. The teacher will provide the students with various collections of mythology from around the world. The students will select myths to read from cultures they are studying in Social Studies (interdisciplinary connections).
2. Using the myths they have selected, students will analyze the use of text features (Objectives a - c). Students will use the following questions:

Organizational aids (titles, chapter titles, subtitles, or subheadings)

1. What information does the title give you about the content of the text?
2. After reading the text, which narrative element is predicted in the title (analysis)? Compose a subtitle that would give the reader more information about the text.
3. Does the text use subheadings? What subheadings would you add to enhance understanding of the narrative elements?

Graphic aids (pictures, illustrations, and punctuation) and print features (bold print, color print, font type, italics, and underlining)

1. Locate examples of graphic aids and print features that are used in the text. How does each one contribute to understanding the myth (analysis)? Which ones are particularly effective? Which are not effective? Why?
2. What graphic and print features could be added to contribute to the meaning of the text?

Informational aids (footnoted words and passages, captions, biographical information about the author, introductions to literary pieces, and photographs)

1. What information do the footnotes add to the myth? How does each one contribute to understanding the myth? Which ones are particularly

- effective? Which are not effective? Why? What words or phrases could be footnoted to enhance the understanding of the narrative elements?
2. What information do captions add to the text? How does each one contribute to understanding the myth (analysis)? Which ones are particularly effective? Which are not effective? Why? What captions might be added to enhance the understanding of the narrative elements?
  3. What background information is provided in the introduction? How does the information contribute to understanding the myth? What background information might be added to better understand the myth?
3. Based on their analysis of the text features, students may add organizational, graphic and informational aids to the myths in their collections.
  4. Students may use Internet resources to find additional informational aids. Students may use word-processing and design software to enhance organizational or graphic aids and print features (technology integration).
  5. Students will compose introductions to their mythology collections explaining to the student readers how text features have been used to facilitate their understanding of the myths (synthesis).

Reading Grade 6 Objective 3.A.2.a

Activities

After reading a literary book with chapter titles, the teacher will place students in small groups and assign each group a different chapter in the text. The students will reread or review the contents of the chapter and complete the following chart.

Chapter Title
Why does the chapter have this title?
Does the chapter title support a theme? How?

To correctly complete the chart, students will record the chapter title. Next students will record text-based reasons for the chapter to have this title. Finally students will review the chapter's content in relation to its title and explain whether or not the chapter title supports a theme of the text. Each group will share its results with the remainder of the class. Teacher Note: With this activity teachers will use chapter titles, organizational aids, to conduct a review of the contents of the text and at the same time trace the development of a theme.

The teacher will display a literary text with the title covered. Students will use think/pair/share to determine the missing organizational aid. Students will share their responses and discuss the importance and purpose of the title. The teacher will display several titles of literary texts, and students will predict the stories' topics. Then students will work in small groups. Each group will be given portions of literary texts with the title missing and an envelope containing titles for those texts. Students will match the texts and titles. Students will share their responses and provide evidence from the text that supports their selections.

The teacher will select a play with multiple acts or scene changes and create a matrix for student responses.

(Sample Matrix)

	Scene One	Scene Two	Scene Three
Characters
Setting

While reading the play students will record on the matrix changes that occur that are noted by subheading. (Example: Scene 2...in the forest) After reading students will explain how the subheading signaled a change and assisted in their understanding of the play's action. Next, the teacher should select another play with multiple acts or scene changes and reformat the text eliminating all subheadings. Students will be given a portion of the reformatted text. After reading is complete, the teacher will divide the class into small groups who will analyze the text to determine where subheadings would assist in their understanding. Finally students will compare their reworked text to the original.

The teacher will provide students with a literary text and will assist them in locating its organizational aids. Findings will be recorded on an organizer

(Sample Organizer)

Organizational Aids
Key Words and Phrases
Inferences

Once the organizer is complete, students and teacher will discuss its contents focusing on the organizational aids' contributions to constructing meaning from the text.

Clarification

Reading Grade 6 Indicator 3.A.2

To show proficiency of the skills included with this indicator, a reader will demonstrate knowledge of the text features of a literary text which are the elements by which a literary text is organized. Identification of each feature and its relationship to all other features assists a reader in comprehension of an entire text. As complexity of a text increases, a reader advances from identification to explanation and analysis of the features. Considering how all these features work together helps a reader to understand and evaluate a text.

To identify, explain, and analyze how organizational aids contribute to meaning of a literary text, a reader must first locate the title of the literary text and consider any information that a title might give about the content of a text. That information can help a reader predict the focus of the selection. After reading a whole text, a reader can return to the title to determine its role in the meaning of the text. For example, a title might relay or enhance information about any narrative element: character, setting, story events or theme.

In addition, a reader can locate and consider the chapter titles. They can define in smaller segments the character development or story events within that section. Subtitles or subheadings break the narrative elements into even smaller sections.

Graphic text features include pictures, illustrations, punctuation, and print features. Organizational text features include the title of the work, chapter titles, subtitles, and subheadings. Informational aids include footnoted words and passages, biographical information about the author, introductions, and photographs. These features assist a reader when constructing meaning of an entire text by providing an informal outline. A critical reader uses these aids to enhance understanding of an entire text by judging their relevance to the work.

To identify and explain how graphic aids contribute to meaning, a reader must locate these text features within a text. Pictures and illustrations extend a reader's comprehension by providing a visual that enhances a reader's understanding of a text. Punctuation can be a clue to tone, mood, or author's style. Print features such as font type or font color serve as signals that changes are occurring, conversation or interior monologue is beginning, or simply that this text is important.

To identify and explain how informational aids contribute to meaning, a reader needs to focus on the location of these features within a literary text. Each of these informational aids provides scaffolding for a reader to fully comprehend a literary passage:

- Footnoted words and phrases offer a reader more detailed information about terminology.
- Captions for pictures and illustrations emphasize information stated in the text or provide additional information that is not always contained within the body of a text.
- Biographical information about the author gives interesting or relevant details about the author's life and can, at times, offer reasons for the author's purpose in writing about a particular subject or event.
- Introductions to literary pieces help a reader make predictions about content or create a basis for fully understanding a text.
- Photographs of people and places aid a reader in visualizing as he/she reads.
